PUBLIC SAFETY IN KRALJEVO – RANKOVIĆEVO (1944–1955)

Jovan Simijanović, PhD

Institute for Serbian Culture in Priština, Leposavić, Serbia

Institute for Political Studies, Belgrade, Serbia

Purpose: The first decade after the Second World War represents an important period, but still a period with which scientific public is not sufficiently familiar with regarding the activities of public security organs at the local level in former Serbia as one of the republics of the former Democratic Federal Yugoslavia, and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The intention of the author is to contribute to the knowledge of the circumstances at the time of the founding of the city militia in 1945, about its activities and the tasks it faced until 1955.

Design/Methods/Approach: In this paper, the historiographical methodological approach is applied. Primary historical sources were researched. Using methodological approaches to sociology, we tried to contribute to the knowledge about the impact of criminal phenomena on the society of that time, as well as the types, characteristics and success of the institutional fight against these phenomena.

Findings: Among other things, the paper deals with the founding of the city militia and its work in the spring of 1945, as well as some characteristic criminal phenomena they encountered: disturbing public order and peace, fights, prostitution, theft, etc. The organizational structure of the public security services is presented.

Originality/Value: The paper is primarily based on previously unused primary and original historical sources from the Historical Archive of Kraljevo and the Archives of Serbia. In addition to the above, the paper used and published sources, relevant literature and the press.

Keywords: Public security, crime, Kraljevo – Rankovićevo, Serbia, Yugoslavia, 1944–1955.
